XVII. Student Academic and Disposition Process

The student in the Counseling Psychology Program is monitored throughout the program to maximize their potential for success. The process is 5 tiered.

- a. Students are screened during the admission process. In Counseling Psychology, students are screened at the graduate Admission's Office and then by the Counseling Psychology Program Admission's committee. They must have a GPA that is 2.75 or above and provide answers to the narrative questions which are reviewed by the admissions committee. If in range, they are offered admission into the program.
- b. Counseling Psychology students are screened by the Graduate Admissions office and the Counseling Psychology Admissions Committee. The minimum GPA for admission to the Counseling Psychology program is 2.75. Students who do not meet the program expectations may be eliminated at either round of the screening. The Counseling Psychology Admissions Committee may interview students who are moved forward after the two rounds of screening. All interviewees are asked the same questions and the responses are scored on a rubric. Students who are interviewed and pass are admitted into the program.
- c. The second review is done after the student has completed 12-18 courses. If needed, professors have an incident report form which is called the Student Professional Development Recommendation (SPDC). All classroom professors are to fill out an SPDC form on any student who is having a professional or academic problem. These forms are moved forward to the Department Chair. It is then moved forward to the advisor or to the full faculty for remediation depending on the severity of the issue.
- d. The student must submit an application with a picture and the GPA at 12- 18 hours in the program. If there is a problem, the student is referred to the advisor for remediation. If the student has the requisite GPA and dispositions, they are Advanced to Candidacy.
- e. All students are reviewed again during and at the end of Practicum. Practicum is 100 hours for the Counseling Psychology Program. Formative and Summative evaluations are completed by the On-site Professional Licensed Counselor who supervises the student and the Individual University Practicum Supervisors who reviews their work and provides supervision. Students also complete a self-evaluation and submit a form at the mid-term and final portions of the Practicum. All forms are review with the Professor of the course and a decision is made about whether the student is ready to move forward. The professor gives the final grade. A final grade of Pass is given to student who are allowed to move forward to internship. A remediation plan is put in place for students who are having difficulty at this level.
- f. The last tier of this process occurs during Internship. Counseling Psychology students have one Internship of 600 hours. Students must complete their supervised hours. The final grade is given by the professor. If a student is having difficulty at this point, a remediation plan can be put in place. This usual includes addition supervised hours.
